

Pole Dancing

Pole dancing is not just a dance. It is dance, gymnastics and yoga all rolled into one.

Complex moves require women to lift their entire body weight and to look effortless. The movements work the body as a whole, not just one muscle at a time. This means a full body workout, second to none.

It is such a simple piece of equipment, but probably the most challenging one - there are no handles, no steps and it can be very slippery.

Miss Australia 2006

I found this video clip of “Miss Australia 2006” on U-Tube.

If this video doesn't inspire you, I don't know what will! You will want to watch it again and again. You will admire her and hate her at the same time.

Amazing Guy

I found this video clip on U-Tube as well.

It starts with 2 girls working the poles. Then a male comes up, takes over from the one girl, and totally steals the show!

Pole Dancing Tips

I found some good tips by POLEMINX - the link is:

<http://www.poleminx.co.uk>

I was contemplating making a summary of the tips in her blog but I decided against it.

She has such a nice writing style and there is simply too much to put on one page here.

Just in case the blog gets taken down, I am putting all these on PDF as well.

I will add more tips from other pro's as and when I find more...

Yes, I bought a pole!

And now I've added one more thing to my list of "things I wonder if I'll ever be able to master"!

When I ordered my pole, I was so excited that I couldn't sleep - I conjured up wild fantasies of myself on this awesome piece of equipment and fancied myself a pro dancer at once.

Then the pole arrived...

What a humbling experience! All I can say is... to those girls in the amazing videos... HOW THE #$%& DO YOU DO IT???

Well, it's true what they say: there really ARE no handles or foot holes! Yes, it's also slippery at times. But the WORST is... the moment you start using it, you realize that you suddenly, unexpectedly, miraculously... picked up weight, and you are now weighing about 3 tons. Or at least that's how you feel! SO HEAVY! Try pulling up your body weight if you've never done one-arm pull-ups at the gym! Not so easy, right? Not easy for me anyway, although... I must admit, I am on the wrong side of 40, and haven't been to gym "in a while". That's the very reason I bought the pole - so that I could get a full-body workout the "fun" way. FUN? What fun? It's HARD WORK, people!

I started with Natasha's beginners video, I cried, swore, and cried some more. I gave up a few times and then I started again. Moving around the pole is something even I could learn. I managed the "fireman spin" and some other interesting moves. But when we got to the "Invert" I was bowled - HANGING UPSIDE DOWN? ME? Well, it IS in the "beginners" video! It took me literally WEEKS to finally muster the courage to try it, with my son standing ready to catch the falling star if necessary. And it wasn't half as difficult and scary as I first thought it would be. So now I am able to do the "invert" move, albeit not necessarily "with grace". I still can't "sit" on the pole, cause my sissy legs just hurt too much when I let go with my hands, which means I am still officially on "beginners level", and I still weigh a ton.

Anyway, be that as it may, I am NOT getting rid of that pole!

It stares at me at night, and it glares at me in the morning... and I WILL master it.

I will NOT submit to it. I will NOT give up!

Why not get your own and join the ranks of thousands of women who might never "go pro" - yet somehow advanced to a higher state, uplifted, elevated, floating on a fantasy cloud, dreaming of the day they will finally have mastered "THE POLE".
